

What is meant by a dominant position in a market?

A company may be considered dominant if, by itself or with an affiliated company, it occupies a position of such economic strength as will enable it to operate in the market without effective competition.